

The first of these is the Handwritten style, which is characterized by its fluid, cursive script. It is often used for personal letters and informal documents. The second is the Printed style, which is more formal and structured, typically used for official correspondence and legal documents. The third is the Decorative style, which is highly ornate and often used for special occasions or as a signature.

[The page contains handwritten Greek text in a cursive script, likely from a manuscript. A large, ornate initial letter 'Α' is visible at the top left. The text is written on aged paper with some staining and wear.]
